

THE ARCHITECTS NEWSPAPER

SOHO TOWERS

New images of Renzo Piano's luxury SoHo residential tower released

By WIL BARLOW • July 21, 2016

(Courtesy Noë & Associates with The Boundary)

New images of Renzo Piano Building Workshop's first residential building in New York City have surfaced, showing off the façade and a few of its amenities. The 30-story tower will be split into two spires, and will be located at 565 Broome Street in SoHo.

“565 Broome SoHo” will offer a total of 115 residences, including two duplex penthouses. The other units will range from studios to four-bedroom homes.

The tower is being built with luxury in mind, and offers all the amenities one might expect from a top-tier residential building. In addition to a 55-foot-long indoor pool, sauna, and fitness center, tenants will be able to park their cars using a private driveway.

(Courtesy Noë & Associates with The Boundary)

All units will offer floor to ceiling windows and custom designed kitchen fixtures, and some will contain an outdoor living room and private pool. The building’s facade is being built with powder-coated aluminum and acoustic glass to keep out the noise of SoHo and the neighboring Financial District.

Renzo Piano’s other buildings in New York include the Whitney Museum and the New York Times Building.